

POEMS67.COM

POEM IN ENGLISH

SHARON THESEN

MEAN DRUNK POEM

Backward & down into inbetween as Vicki says. Or as Robin teaches the gap, from which all things emerge. A left handed compliment. Bats, houses of parliament, giants, stones.
What woman, witness to such Thought, does not feel so described & so impotent she thinks she must speak. 'I will take your linguistic prick & you will take my linguistic prick & together we will gap this imagined earth together.' She has the feeling, all her life, that she never makes sense. There is something else, big & dark, at the edge of what she knows, she cannot say. She always has the feeling she is translating into Broken english. Language all her life is a second language, the first is mute & exists. I get drunk to lubricate my brain & all that comes out of my Gap is more bloody writing. No wonder we cook dinner. Have another kid. Write poetry about the Beloved & kiss ass.
Who cares, as Eleanor says,
who beats whose door down yelling Truth.
The door is only &
always an entrance.
Sing Om as you take the sausage rolls out of the oven.
The Gap is real & there is no such thing as female intelligence. We're dumber than hell.